FOREWORD

Yearly the dahlia is growing in favor. Just now it is blazing its way through the gardens of the Middle West and the grower in that section is well repaid—and proportionately, too—for his labor.

There is no better hobby than a garden, whether one directs or personally does the work. Visit our gardens and study the possibility of the dahlia for garden decoration. You and your friends are most welcome.

Our Show Gardens are fifteen miles Northwest of Indianapolis and are easily accessible from the Dixie Highway (29) one mile east of us, and from the Jackson Highway (52) five miles west of us. Just say "Tudor" or follow our signs.

A number of the dahlias listed herein are grown and displayed by Mrs. C. A. Harmon at 704 Erie Street, two blocks north of East Lincolnway (30) Valparaiso, Indiana.

All tubers are guaranteed to be true-to-name and of healthy stock.

TERMS: Net cash. 25 per cent remittance with order and balance cash at time of delivery, or orders will be mailed C. O. D., if preferred. Prices are strictly F. O. B. Gardens.

For those who have not had occasion to acquaint themselves with named varieties we have arranged collections of our selection as indicated. We also stand ready to assist you in selecting a special collection of any size.

To our customers, old and new, our heartiest thanks and good wishes for success.

Very sincerely yours,

JENNIE D. TUDOR

IF YOU WOULD GROW GOOD DAHLIAS

Do not let the tubers dry out before planting. Unpack and cover with moist soil until that time.

Do not plant until the ground is warm. Plants will grow more quickly and more sturdily if planted a bit later.

Spade two spades deep, using potato fertilizer or bone meal in the lower half. Loosen heavy ground with sand or sifted coal ashes.

Plant tuber flat five or six inches deep. Cover especially the sprout, with sand. Set stake near the head of tuber and fill in the soil. If sprout has begun to unfold the leaves, fill to first leaf only.

Cultivate twice a week and as soon as possible after every rain until buds begin to form. Unimpeded growth means green stems and a wealth of bloom. Hard, woody growth should be cut away.

Spray with Black Leaf 40 at regular intervals. This will rid your plants of most of the dahlia pests.

When buds form, stop all but light cultivation. Fertilize again and disbud carefully.

In dry weather water once a week, soaking the ground thoroughly or not at all.

When frost kills the plants, lift the clumps carefully with as much soil as possible, turn upside down to drain the stalks, and store in boxes in the vegetable cellar. A small amount of sand or light soil may be sprinkled over the clumps, or the boxes may be filled to insure preservation.

GLADIOLI

Plant from March to July in full sunshine in the vegetable garden. Bone meal is an excellent fertilizer; avoid all animal manures at time of planting. Set all bulbs four inches deep and cultivate thoroughly throughout the season.
